BY THE EDITOR.

On the 7 of January, 1633–4, court was held at a place called "York," on Charles River. By deed dated 2d May, 1634, "Martin Becker of Plimouth, England, merchant" leased for 11 years a tract of land in York plantation to Thomas Trotter, Thomas Jefferyes, and John Baylis. Martin Baker patented 600 acres "from Robert Bue's agst. Capt. Martur's (1) land," 24 April, 1635. Martin Baker was sheriff of New Kent in 1657. "Baker" and "Becker" were the same name.

George Ludlow obtained a patent 26 July, 1646 for 1452 acres lyeing in York Co., "beginning at the mouth of Wormeley's Creek, and fromt hence running up the River 555 poles unto certaine marked trees,"&c. 600 acres, part thereof formerly granted unto Martin Baker by patent dated 24 April, 1635, and 750 acres called "Yorke plantation," purchased from George Menifie, Esq. unto whom the same was mortgaged by Sir John Harvey. Ludlow's land adjoined on the west the land patented by Capt. Nicholas Martian on 14 March, 1639. This land, and not Ludlow's, was the present seat of Yorktown. Martian's daughter, Elizabeth, married Col. George Reade of the Council, and his son Benjamin Reade sold fifty acres for a town to the County in 1691.

Old "York" was quite a different place from Yorktown. Court was often held there during the early part of the 17th century. Kiskiack was the first settlement in York County (1630). York was next (1632) and the Middle Plantation (1632) was the third. In September, 1632, and again in 1632–33, York was represented by Lyonell Goulston,[1] a Justice of York County.[2]

George Ludlow came of a prominent family[3] of Wiltshire in England, and in Virginia was for many years a member of the Virginia Council, with rank of Colonel. He was baptized at Dinton 15th Sept., 1596, and his will was proved Aug. 1st, 1656. He left the farm on Wormeley's Creek, together with the rest of his property to a nephew, Lt. Coll. Thomas Ludlow, the son of Gabriel and Phillis Ludlow. Thomas was baptized at Warminster 1st Nov. 1624, and John Ludlow, his brother, qualified on his estate in Virginia, 20 Dec., 1660.[4]

Her son, George, and daughter, Mary, died without issue and her daughter, Elizabeth, became the wife of Rev. John Wiles. In 1686, "Ludlow's Land" was sold [1] to Major Lawrence Smith, of Gloucester County.

This gentleman was a man of great consequence in his day. In March, 1675–6, the General Assembly in order to stop Indian depredations appointed[2] a number of forts, and Major Lawrence Smith commanded "111 men out of Gloucester Co." at a fort near the falls of Rappahannock river. These forts helped to exasperate the people in Bacon's favor and Major Smith, who led the "trained bands" of Gloucester the next year against the rebels, was deserted on the field by his troops, who surrendered to

The Court decided the law for Col. Smith. And thereupon an appeal was taken by the plaintiff to the General Court, but it does not seem with any success, as Smith and his heirs held the land.

Lawrence Smith was Colonel, Justice, Sheriff of York County, one of the feoffees of Yorktown, and a member of the House of Burgesses. He married 1^st Mildred, daughter of Capt. Thomas Chisman, (1) brother of Major Edmund Chisman of Bacon's Rebellion and 2^dly Mildred, daughter of John Reade (1)

The children of Thomas and Mary were Dolly Graham and Thomas Jameson. The former married Samuel Ayres and David J. Ayers of Keokuk, Iowa, is his grandson.

David Jameson was Lieutenant Governor, a member of the State Senate, &c., and his will is recorded in the Hustings Court Record book of Yorktown. He gave one-half of his property to John Jameson to whom Major André was delivered and who was Lt. Col. in the Continental line and one-half to David Jameson of Culpeper and David Jameson, Jr. of Caroline, his nephews.

Lawrence's will, dated 7 July, 1787, pr. 15 Dec., 1788, mentions wife, Elizabeth and children. An Elizabeth Smith died about 1812, and her will proved Oct. 19, 1812 mentions sons, Peyton and George.

The will of Lawrence, son of Col. Lawrence Smith, was proved Feb. 15, 1779, and in 1805, Robert, Lawrence's son, sold to Robert Gibbons of Yorktown, 120 acres on Wormeley's Creek devised to him by his father's will after a life estate in his mother Damaris (Gibbons). Robert [3] died about 1814.

By the will, however, of Col. Lawrence Smith, the neck of land whereon he now (1750) lived at the mouth of Wormeley's Creek went to Mrs. Mildred (Reade) Smith for life. According to a bond dated 21 August 1780, given by Thomas Nelson, Jun. "as guardian of Augustine and Thomas Smith, orphans of Robert Smith, deceased," there appear to have been two other sons, probably by Mary Calthorpe as the Calthorpe name appears among the children of Augustine Smith—"Page Family," p. 71. John Smith, who makes his will in 1814, was another son, as he calls Augustine Smith, brother.

The Moore families of Elizabeth City, York and King William in whom the name, Augustine, appeared to be a family name, were probably all descended from Augustine (1) Moore above mentioned.

worthy friend, Gen. Thomas Nelson," subject to the life estate in his wife.[1]

These researches make it very evident that the conclusion of Mr. Wm. H. Sheild in his letter [2] to Bishop Meade, that Temple Farm was once the residence of Gov. Spotswood, and that he lies buried there, is ill founded. I doubt not that Mr. Shield out of fragments of tombstones put together the name of Spotswood, but without further words this is not conclusive of its being his tombstone. The weight of evidence is that he was buried at his home at Germanna. The name, "Temple Farm," does not appear to have been used in designating the place till after 1818. [3] Or if an earlier date shall be assigned to it, it is more natural to refer the origin of the name to Rev. Peter Temple who married the widow Ludlow, and occupied it at the time of its transfer to the Smiths.

What is pointed out as an ancient temple is evidently the ruins of the old York Church situated at or near the old York plantation described in the patents. This suggestion is confirmed by the simple fact that Christian settlers did not build Greek temples, but churches; and within the enclosure (proving the antiquity of the ruins) were several defaced and broken monuments of which only one, ornamented with the Gooch arms, is now legible, placed there 55 years before Spotswood came to Virginia in memory of Major Gooch, [1] a member of the Virginia Council.

The old York church and its monuments were abandoned when Yorktown was laid out in 1691. To this once busy emporium of trade the Court House and the Church of York parish were soon transferred—the one from the Half-way house, near the "French ordinary" on the road leading into Martin's Hundred and the other [2] from the old forgotten plantation of Martin Baker and George Menifie. The articles of surrender were signed in 1781, in the old Smith mansion, then occupied by Augustine Moore, who was not the Bernard Moore, whom Kate Spotswood married. The present building, inhabited by Mr. John Cruikshank, was originally the centre building to which was attached two wings.

The following facts gleaned from the York records may be added in support of these conclusions. Till Jan 20, 1679-80, the Court for York County met at private residences. Then the place of adjournment was changed to the French ordinary. Then Court was held at the Half-way house near the "French ordinary." In 1691, pursuant to an act [3] establishing ports, the Justices purchased

50 acres from Benjamin Reade, for port on York river. The town was laid out in half acre lots by Major Lawrence Smith, surveyor. Lots were purchased by Francis Nicholson, Governor from 1690, to 1692, and by other leading citizens. Nicholson was Governor of Maryland from 1694 to 1698, and in 1699, was Governor a second time of Virginia. In 1695, the Governor of Maryland presented his three half acres of land and houses thereon to the Court of York County "to be disposed of for the use of Mr. Robert Leightenhouse, the present schoolmaster, and afterwards to the use and advantage of such persons as shall teach school by y^e approbacon and allowance of y^e Court afores^d."
